the building

The Northeast Waterfront Historic District includes former light factories and warehouses from San Francisco's rich manufacturing and maritime history.

901 Battery Street was constructed in 1923 for the Petri Cigar Company. The Petri Cigar Company became the third largest producer of dry Toscani cigars in the United States.

This seismically reinforced, concrete office building is designated as a contributing structure to the Northeast Waterfront Historic District.

The North Waterfront-Jackson Square area is filled with quaint streetscapes and classic old buildings. MUNI and Golden Gate Transit are less than one block from the property. BART and the Ferry Building are each a 10 minute walk away. 901 Battery Street has its own, dedicated parking structure.
